Two or three weeks ago we detailed two outrages said to have been perpetrated in this county. One was the murder of a new-born child, the other that of a negro girl. We obtained our information from reliable parties, and could not doubt but what our statements in the main were true. The investigation into the child murder by the coroners jury, left no doubt in our minds of the correctness of our published account, and the grand jury declined to find a true bill in accordance with the coroner's verdict, solely upon the ground that before the child was found and examined, it had decayed so much as to make it impossible to prove whether it had been born alive or not. The failure to establish this material fact would have cleared the summer and in all probability will continue to do so to the end of time.
